Professor Page has worked in education since 2000. He began his career as a lecturer of English in Further Education (FE) and he was also a manager in a number of subject areas including humanities, finance and construction. While in FE, Professor Page focused on the development of e-learning, working as a consultant for the Learning and Skills Network, creating the Academy of e-Business and winning the JISC e-Learning Practitioner Award in 2005. After six years in FE, he was appointed as Curriculum and Learning Manager for Linking London Lifelong Learning at Birkbeck, University of London.

As Dean of The Carnegie School of Education at Leeds Beckett University, Professor Page is responsible for the leadership of all education, childhood and social innovation courses within the School as well as research and enterprise activity.

Since achieving his PhD in 2011, Professor Page has conducted research in a range of fields such as teacher misbehaviour, organisational masculinities and performance management in schools. His current research focuses on the surveillance of teachers, the simulation of teaching and commodification within education contexts. This work has resulted in publication in a number of highly ranked journals such as the British Educational Research Journal, the Journal of Education Policy and the British Journal of Sociology of Education.
